Fruit Trees Bear At Different Ages

If you've got young fruit trees in your backyard — trees that haven't as yet borne fruit, you're probably wondering when this will be the year.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture offers this rule-of-thumb guide for impatient fruit growers. As you can see, the length of time required to bear fruit after planting varies with the kind of fruit.

Fig trees, 2 to 3 years; peach, 2 to 4; citrus, 3 to 4; sweet or sour cherry, 4 to 5; plum and pear, 4 to 6; apple, 4 to 7; nuts, 5 to 7.

Dwarf apple and pear trees usually begin to bear 1 to 2 years earlier than standard-size trees.
